Wisdom is an interesting thing in that true wisdom is not restricted to particular cultures or languages. True wisdom is transcendent; it's cross-cultural in every sense of the word. Sure, it may need to be translated into a different language or contextualized in order for it to make sense to someone else, but the core meaning is still there. The meaning remains the same no matter what language or culture or era it is spoken in.

As an example, the Golden Rule isn't just restricted to contemporary English-speaking Westerners. You could go anywhere in the world and find that the golden rule—do unto others as you would want them to do unto you—is known by people of every race, creed, social standing, and culture. They may say it differently from us, but in the end they're saying the same thing, and they've been saying it for a very long time. Another good example of transcendent wisdom: If mama ain't happy, ain't nobody happy! This may be said a million different ways from one culture to the next, but there has never been a husband at any time in history who doesn't understand this wisdom!

Today's Gospel lesson, at first glance, appears to contain a pearl of such wisdom. Many cultures have taken Christ's words in verse 18 about falling on a stone or being crushed by the stone and adapted them to their own folk wisdom and proverbs. Jesus says, "Everyone who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces, and when it falls on anyone, it will crush him." The Jews give credit to a second-century rabbi living in Jerusalem for this similar-sounding proverb: "If a stone falls on a pot, woe to the pot. If a pot falls onto the stone, woe to the pot. Either way, woe to the pot." This same saying is recounted in African and Islamic culture as well, only the Muslims substitute an egg for the pot. "…Either way, woe to the egg."
If you look carefully at the context of Christ's words here in verse 18, though, there's more to it than that. Is Jesus offering up some folksy, fortune-cookie bit of wisdom like the other guys do? "Hey, whether you fall on a stone or the stone falls on you, the results are going to be bad. So whatever the stones are in your life, don't mess with them. You will lose. The stone will win." That's the kind of stuff a lot of people hope to hear in church—some folksy, useful advice for "real life"—but unfortunately for them, that's not what Jesus is saying here. Look again at verse 18: Jesus uses distinct language when he says, "Everyone who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces, and when it falls on anyone, it will crush him."

This isn't just some universal bit of advice, because Jesus himself is the stone he is talking about. This is the stone that the builders rejected, Jesus says in verse 17, which has become the cornerstone. And Jesus doesn't give any non-violent options for encountering the stone: you either fall upon it and break into pieces, or it falls upon you, and you are crushed. This includes even believers—we too are either broken or crushed by Jesus. So what does that mean? It means that everyone, in one way or another, will encounter Christ, the Rock of our salvation, and the result will be brokenness.

The next question that naturally arises is: what does it mean to be broken? What does it mean to be crushed? The Greek word here translated "crushed," λικμάω (lick-MAH-oh), is also a farming term that refers to winnowing. Winnowing is the process by which wheat is separated from chaff by blowing it with a fan, causing the lighter chaff to be blown away and leaving the good grain behind. You may recall John the Baptist's words about Jesus in Matthew 3: "His winnowing fork is in his hand, and he will clear his threshing floor and gather his wheat into the barn, but the chaff he will burn with unquenchable fire." While "crushed" in today's reading carries a different meaning, the implication of separating wheat from chaff remains. The sinful chaff—the crushed dusty remnant separated from the good wheat on the threshing floor—is winnowed right into the fire.
Now, God desires that all men be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth—his truth. It's not his will that some be saved while others are crushed and sent to hell. However…it is precisely God's Will that everyone fall upon him and be broken into a million pieces. There is a difference between being crushed and being broken—a huge difference. God's will is that neither you nor anyone else nor anything else can put you back together again after the Rock of his Word breaks you; that is, anyone but him alone.

You see, that's exactly what God's Word of Law and Gospel does, and it does it in that exact order—all the time. This is his good and gracious will. The Law comes into our lives, and like Humpty Dumpty, we are pushed by that Word of Law off of our proud, arrogant, sinful perches, and broken. God's Law meets us and cracks us right open, exposing our sin for what it is. Our natural tendency is to justify ourselves, passing our sins off as somehow less than sin, or less evil than some other guy's sin, but God's Word cuts through all that foolishness. His Word of the Law confronts and kills. It necessarily breaks us into irreparable shards and pieces.

That brings up a good point. Do you notice the future aspect in Jesus' words? Not everyone is immediately broken into pieces when they encounter Christ and his Word and his will. Some people flat out reject him. Some people refuse ever to let God's Word break them down. They refuse ever to let God's Word conform them to his will. They hear what Christ is saying, but unlike Humpty Dumpty, they encounter God's Word and they hold on tight to their foolish, sinful little perch. They refuse to be broken. However, just because God's Word hasn't broken them yet doesn't mean that it won't at sometime in the future. There's a definite end-time, Judgment Day aspect to this passage: everyone, at some point, will encounter the truth of Christ, the Rock of our salvation. And when that encounter comes, it will either break them, or crush them.
But here's the thing: God doesn't leave us on this side of eternity irreparably broken and dead and miserable. Through his life-giving Gospel—both in Word and Sacrament—God resurrects us. He puts us back together anew—not just "again," but anew, exactly the way he wants. He gives us new and renewed life in Christ. And make no mistakes: In this new and sanctified life, we're not supposed to simply climb right back up on our sinful wall, acting like the sinful, self-righteous Humpty Dumptys who justly deserve temporal and eternal punishment. That's why I said that God doesn't just put us back together again. He doesn't want the old self restored; he wants the new resurrected self. "Go and sin no more," Jesus says. The new life that we live in the joy of our justification, the new sanctified life in Christ, is a life that now desires to do God's will. We desire to do that will not to be saved, but because we are saved—saved by Christ alone.

There's a Lenten theme of repentance peeking through here. In reality, before God's eyes, everyone—every single man, woman, and child born of Adam—is already broken into a million pieces. We may not see it that way through our fallen and sinful eyes, but that's exactly how God sees it. We've all been dashed upon the Rock of Righteousness. There is nothing outside of Christ that can repair the shattered pieces of our fallen sinful life.

However, in true, faithful repentance, we, as baptized children of promise, call out to God from our brokenness, asking him to be merciful to us because of Christ Jesus. The joy, the beauty in all this is that God does exactly that, and more. Not only does he show us mercy and forgiveness in our broken sinfulness, but he also truly does put us back together anew in Christ, making us alive and declaring us to be his precious treasure. You are a treasure so precious that he was willing to ransom his own Son's life in exchange.

So may our Lord, through the working of His Holy Spirit in His Word and Sacraments, continue to open your eyes and ears of faith, so that you may always be able to recognize the deadly reality of your broken, sinful condition. May he grant you the sure and certain faith that doesn't foolishly despair, but instead calls out to him in faithful confidence to be merciful to you because of Christ Jesus alone. More importantly, may he continue to bless you with the opened ears and eyes of saving faith, so that you, with all the faithful, may ever be able to recognize the blessed transcendent Gospel reality that is yours, mine, and belongs to all who've been broken and put back together anew in Christ Jesus, their Lord and Savior. In Jesus' name, amen.
Wisdom is an interesting thing in that true wisdom is not restricted to particular cultures or languages. True wisdom is transcendent; it's cross-cultural in every sense of the word. Sure, it may need to be translated into a different language or contextualized in order for it to make sense to someone else, but the core meaning is still there. The meaning remains the same no matter what language or culture or era it is spoken in.

As an example, the Golden Rule isn't just restricted to contemporary English-speaking Westerners. You could go anywhere in the world and find that the golden rule—do unto others as you would want them to do unto you—is known by people of every race, creed, social standing, and culture. They may say it differently from us, but in the end they're saying the same thing, and they've been saying it for a very long time. Another good example of transcendent wisdom: If mama ain't happy, ain't nobody happy! This may be said a million different ways from one culture to the next, but there has never been a husband at any time in history who doesn't understand this wisdom!

Today's Gospel lesson, at first glance, appears to contain a pearl of such wisdom. Many cultures have taken Christ's words in verse 18 about falling on a stone or being crushed by the stone and adapted them to their own folk wisdom and proverbs. Jesus says, "Everyone who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces, and when it falls on anyone, it will crush him." The Jews give credit to a second-century rabbi living in Jerusalem for this similar-sounding proverb: "If a stone falls on a pot, woe to the pot. If a pot falls onto the stone, woe to the pot. Either way, woe to the pot." This same saying is recounted in African and Islamic culture as well, only the Muslims substitute an egg for the pot. "…Either way, woe to the egg."
If you look carefully at the context of Christ's words here in verse 18, though, there's more to it than that. Is Jesus offering up some folksy, fortune-cookie bit of wisdom like the other guys do? "Hey, whether you fall on a stone or the stone falls on you, the results are going to be bad. So whatever the stones are in your life, don't mess with them. You will lose. The stone will win." That's the kind of stuff a lot of people hope to hear in church—some folksy, useful advice for "real life"—but unfortunately for them, that's not what Jesus is saying here. Look again at verse 18: Jesus uses distinct language when he says, "Everyone who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces, and when it falls on anyone, it will crush him."

This isn't just some universal bit of advice, because Jesus himself is the stone he is talking about. This is the stone that the builders rejected, Jesus says in verse 17, which has become the cornerstone. And Jesus doesn't give any non-violent options for encountering the stone: you either fall upon it and break into pieces, or it falls upon you, and you are crushed. This includes even believers—we too are either broken or crushed by Jesus. So what does that mean? It means that everyone, in one way or another, will encounter Christ, the Rock of our salvation, and the result will be brokenness.

The next question that naturally arises is: what does it mean to be broken? What does it mean to be crushed? The Greek word here translated "crushed," λικμάω (lick-MAH-oh), is also a farming term that refers to winnowing. Winnowing is the process by which wheat is separated from chaff by blowing it with a fan, causing the lighter chaff to be blown away and leaving the good grain behind. You may recall John the Baptist's words about Jesus in Matthew 3: "His winnowing fork is in his hand, and he will clear his threshing floor and gather his wheat into the barn, but the chaff he will burn with unquenchable fire." While "crushed" in today's reading carries a different meaning, the implication of separating wheat from chaff remains. The sinful chaff—the crushed dusty remnant separated from the good wheat on the threshing floor—is winnowed right into the fire.
Now, God desires that all men be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth—his truth. It's not his will that some be saved while others are crushed and sent to hell. However…it is precisely God's Will that everyone fall upon him and be broken into a million pieces. There is a difference between being crushed and being broken—a huge difference. God's will is that neither you nor anyone else nor anything else can put you back together again after the Rock of his Word breaks you; that is, anyone but him alone.

You see, that's exactly what God's Word of Law and Gospel does, and it does it in that exact order—all the time. This is his good and gracious will. The Law comes into our lives, and like Humpty Dumpty, we are pushed by that Word of Law off of our proud, arrogant, sinful perches, and broken. God's Law meets us and cracks us right open, exposing our sin for what it is. Our natural tendency is to justify ourselves, passing our sins off as somehow less than sin, or less evil than some other guy's sin, but God's Word cuts through all that foolishness. His Word of the Law confronts and kills. It necessarily breaks us into irreparable shards and pieces.

That brings up a good point. Do you notice the future aspect in Jesus' words? Not everyone is immediately broken into pieces when they encounter Christ and his Word and his will. Some people flat out reject him. Some people refuse ever to let God's Word break them down. They refuse ever to let God's Word conform them to his will. They hear what Christ is saying, but unlike Humpty Dumpty, they encounter God's Word and they hold on tight to their foolish, sinful little perch. They refuse to be broken. However, just because God's Word hasn't broken them yet doesn't mean that it won't at sometime in the future. There's a definite end-time, Judgment Day aspect to this passage: everyone, at some point, will encounter the truth of Christ, the Rock of our salvation. And when that encounter comes, it will either break them, or crush them.
But here's the thing: God doesn't leave us on this side of eternity irreparably broken and dead and miserable. Through his life-giving Gospel—both in Word and Sacrament—God resurrects us. He puts us back together anew—not just "again," but anew, exactly the way he wants. He gives us new and renewed life in Christ. And make no mistakes: In this new and sanctified life, we're not supposed to simply climb right back up on our sinful wall, acting like the sinful, self-righteous Humpty Dumpty's who justly deserve temporal and eternal punishment. That's why I said that God doesn't just put us back together again. He doesn't want the old self restored; he wants the new resurrected self. "Go and sin no more," Jesus says. The new life that we live in the joy of our justification, the new sanctified life in Christ, is a life that now desires to do God's will. We desire to do that will not to be saved, but because we are saved—saved by Christ alone.

There's a Lenten theme of repentance peeking through here. In reality, before God's eyes, everyone—every single man, woman, and child born of Adam—is already broken into a million pieces. We may not see it that way through our fallen and sinful eyes, but that's exactly how God sees it. We've all been dashed upon the Rock of Righteousness. There is nothing outside of Christ that can repair the shattered pieces of our fallen sinful life.

However, in true, faithful repentance, we, as baptized children of promise, call out to God from our brokenness, asking him to be merciful to us because of Christ Jesus. The joy, the beauty in all this is that God does exactly that, and more. Not only does he show us mercy and forgiveness in our broken sinfulness, but he also truly does put us back together anew in Christ, making us alive and declaring us to be his precious treasure. You are a treasure so precious that he was willing to ransom his own Son's life in exchange.

So may our Lord, through the working of His Holy Spirit in His Word and Sacraments, continue to open your eyes and ears of faith, so that you may always be able to recognize the deadly reality of your broken, sinful condition. May he grant you the sure and certain faith that doesn't foolishly despair, but instead calls out to him in faithful confidence to be merciful to you because of Christ Jesus alone. More importantly, may he continue to bless you with the opened ears and eyes of saving faith, so that you, with all the faithful, may ever be able to recognize the blessed transcendent Gospel reality that is yours, mine, and belongs to all who've been broken and put back together anew in Christ Jesus, their Lord and Savior. In Jesus' name, amen.
Wisdom is an interesting thing in that true wisdom is not restricted to particular cultures or languages. True wisdom is transcendent; it's cross-cultural in every sense of the word. Sure, it may need to be translated into a different language or contextualized in order for it to make sense to someone else, but the core meaning is still there. The meaning remains the same no matter what language or culture or era it is spoken in.

As an example, the Golden Rule isn't just restricted to contemporary English-speaking Westerners. You could go anywhere in the world and find that the golden rule—do unto others as you would want them to do unto you—is known by people of every race, creed, social standing, and culture. They may say it differently from us, but in the end they're saying the same thing, and they've been saying it for a very long time. Another good example of transcendent wisdom: If mama ain't happy, ain't nobody happy! This may be said a million different ways from one culture to the next, but there has never been a husband at any time in history who doesn't understand this wisdom!

Today's Gospel lesson, at first glance, appears to contain a pearl of such wisdom. Many cultures have taken Christ's words in verse 18 about falling on a stone or being crushed by the stone and adapted them to their own folk wisdom and proverbs. Jesus says, "Everyone who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces, and when it falls on anyone, it will crush him." The Jews give credit to a second-century rabbi living in Jerusalem for this similar-sounding proverb: "If a stone falls on a pot, woe to the pot. If a pot falls onto the stone, woe to the pot. Either way, woe to the pot." This same saying is recounted in African and Islamic culture as well, only the Muslims substitute an egg for the pot. "…Either way, woe to the egg."
If you look carefully at the context of Christ's words here in verse 18, though, there's more to it than that. Is Jesus offering up some folksy, fortune-cookie bit of wisdom like the other guys do? "Hey, whether you fall on a stone or the stone falls on you, the results are going to be bad. So whatever the stones are in your life, don't mess with them. You will lose. The stone will win." That's the kind of stuff a lot of people hope to hear in church—some folksy, useful advice for "real life"—but unfortunately for them, that's not what Jesus is saying here. Look again at verse 18: Jesus uses distinct language when he says, "Everyone who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces, and when it falls on anyone, it will crush him."

This isn't just some universal bit of advice, because Jesus himself is the stone he is talking about. This is the stone that the builders rejected, Jesus says in verse 17, which has become the cornerstone. And Jesus doesn't give any non-violent options for encountering the stone: you either fall upon it and break into pieces, or it falls upon you, and you are crushed. This includes even believers—we too are either broken or crushed by Jesus. So what does that mean? It means that everyone, in one way or another, will encounter Christ, the Rock of our salvation, and the result will be brokenness.

The next question that naturally arises is: what does it mean to be broken? What does it mean to be crushed? The Greek word here translated "crushed," λικμάω (lick-MAH-oh), is also a farming term that refers to winnowing. Winnowing is the process by which wheat is separated from chaff by blowing it with a fan, causing the lighter chaff to be blown away and leaving the good grain behind. You may recall John the Baptist's words about Jesus in Matthew 3: "His winnowing fork is in his hand, and he will clear his threshing floor and gather his wheat into the barn, but the chaff he will burn with unquenchable fire." While "crushed" in today's reading carries a different meaning, the implication of separating wheat from chaff remains. The sinful chaff—the crushed dusty remnant separated from the good wheat on the threshing floor—is winnowed right into the fire.
Now, God desires that all men be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth—his truth.
It's not his will that some be saved while others are crushed and sent to hell. However…it is precisely God's Will that everyone fall upon him and be broken into a million pieces. There is a difference between being crushed and being broken—a huge difference. God's will is that neither you nor anyone else nor anything else can put you back together again after the Rock of his Word breaks you; that is, anyone but him alone.

You see, that's exactly what God's Word of Law and Gospel does, and it does it in that exact order—all the time. This is his good and gracious will. The Law comes into our lives, and like Humpty Dumpty, we are pushed by that Word of Law off of our proud, arrogant, sinful perches, and broken. God's Law meets us and cracks us right open, exposing our sin for what it is. Our natural tendency is to justify ourselves, passing our sins off as somehow less than sin, or less evil than some other guy's sin, but God's Word cuts through all that foolishness. His Word of the Law confronts and kills. It necessarily breaks us into irreparable shards and pieces.

That brings up a good point. Do you notice the future aspect in Jesus' words? Not everyone is immediately broken into pieces when they encounter Christ and his Word and his will. Some people flat out reject him. Some people refuse ever to let God's Word break them down. They refuse ever to let God's Word conform them to his will. They hear what Christ is saying, but unlike Humpty Dumpty, they encounter God's Word and they hold on tight to their foolish, sinful little perch. They refuse to be broken. However, just because God's Word hasn't broken them yet doesn't mean that it won't at sometime in the future. There's a definite end-time, Judgment Day aspect to this passage: everyone, at some point, will encounter the truth of Christ, the Rock of our salvation. And when that encounter comes, it will either break them, or crush them.
But here's the thing: God doesn't leave us on this side of eternity irreparably broken and dead and miserable. Through his life-giving Gospel—both in Word and Sacrament—God resurrects us. He puts us back together anew—not just "again," but anew, exactly the way he wants. He gives us new and renewed life in Christ. And make no mistakes: In this new and sanctified life, we're not supposed to simply climb right back up on our sinful wall, acting like the sinful, self-righteous Humpty Dumptys who justly deserve temporal and eternal punishment. That's why I said that God doesn't just put us back together again. He doesn't want the old self restored; he wants the new resurrected self. "Go and sin no more," Jesus says. The new life that we live in the joy of our justification, the new sanctified life in Christ, is a life that now desires to do God's will. We desire to do that will not to be saved, but because we are saved—saved by Christ alone.

There's a Lenten theme of repentance peeking through here. In reality, before God's eyes, everyone—every single man, woman, and child born of Adam—is already broken into a million pieces. We may not see it that way through our fallen and sinful eyes, but that's exactly how God sees it. We've all been dashed upon the Rock of Righteousness. There is nothing outside of Christ that can repair the shattered pieces of our fallen sinful life.

However, in true, faithful repentance, we, as baptized children of promise, call out to God from our brokenness, asking him to be merciful to us because of Christ Jesus. The joy, the beauty in all this is that God does exactly that, and more. Not only does he show us mercy and forgiveness in our broken sinfulness, but he also truly does put us back together anew in Christ, making us alive and declaring us to be his precious treasure. You are a treasure so precious that he was willing to ransom his own Son's life in exchange.

So may our Lord, through the working of His Holy Spirit in His Word and Sacraments, continue to open your eyes and ears of faith, so that you may always be able to recognize the deadly reality of your broken, sinful condition. May he grant you the sure and certain faith that doesn't foolishly despair, but instead calls out to him in faithful confidence to be merciful to you because of Christ Jesus alone. More importantly, may he continue to bless you with the opened ears and eyes of saving faith, so that you, with all the faithful, may ever be able to recognize the blessed transcendent Gospel reality that is yours, mine, and belongs to all who've been broken and put back together anew in Christ Jesus, their Lord and Savior. In Jesus' name, amen.
Wisdom is an interesting thing in that true wisdom is not restricted to particular cultures or languages. True wisdom is transcendent; it's cross-cultural in every sense of the word. Sure, it may need to be translated into a different language or contextualized in order for it to make sense to someone else, but the core meaning is still there. The meaning remains the same no matter what language or culture or era it is spoken in.

As an example, the Golden Rule isn't just restricted to contemporary English-speaking Westerners. You could go anywhere in the world and find that the golden rule—do unto others as you would want them to do unto you—is known by people of every race, creed, social standing, and culture. They may say it differently from us, but in the end they're saying the same thing, and they've been saying it for a very long time. Another good example of transcendent wisdom: If mama ain't happy, ain't nobody happy! This may be said a million different ways from one culture to the next, but there has never been a husband at any time in history who doesn't understand this wisdom!

Today's Gospel lesson, at first glance, appears to contain a pearl of such wisdom. Many cultures have taken Christ's words in verse 18 about falling on a stone or being crushed by the stone and adapted them to their own folk wisdom and proverbs. Jesus says, "Everyone who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces, and when it falls on anyone, it will crush him." The Jews give credit to a second-century rabbi living in Jerusalem for this similar-sounding proverb: "If a stone falls on a pot, woe to the pot. If a pot falls onto the stone, woe to the pot. Either way, woe to the pot." This same saying is recounted in African and Islamic culture as well, only the Muslims substitute an egg for the pot. "…Either way, woe to the egg."
If you look carefully at the context of Christ's words here in verse 18, though, there's more to it than that. Is Jesus offering up some folksy, fortune-cookie bit of wisdom like the other guys do? "Hey, whether you fall on a stone or the stone falls on you, the results are going to be bad. So whatever the stones are in your life, don't mess with them. You will lose. The stone will win." That's the kind of stuff a lot of people hope to hear in church—some folksy, useful advice for "real life"—but unfortunately for them, that's not what Jesus is saying here. Look again at verse 18: Jesus uses distinct language when he says, "Everyone who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces, and when it falls on anyone, it will crush him."

This isn't just some universal bit of advice, because Jesus himself is the stone he is talking about. This is the stone that the builders rejected, Jesus says in verse 17, which has become the cornerstone. And Jesus doesn't give any non-violent options for encountering the stone: you either fall upon it and break into pieces, or it falls upon you, and you are crushed. This includes even believers—we too are either broken or crushed by Jesus. So what does that mean? It means that everyone, in one way or another, will encounter Christ, the Rock of our salvation, and the result will be brokenness.

The next question that naturally arises is: what does it mean to be broken? What does it mean to be crushed? The Greek word here translated "crushed," λικμάω (lick-MAH-oh), is also a farming term that refers to winnowing. Winnowing is the process by which wheat is separated from chaff by blowing it with a fan, causing the lighter chaff to be blown away and leaving the good grain behind. You may recall John the Baptist's words about Jesus in Matthew 3: "His winnowing fork is in his hand, and he will clear his threshing floor and gather his wheat into the barn, but the chaff he will burn with unquenchable fire." While "crushed" in today's reading carries a different meaning, the implication of separating wheat from chaff remains. The sinful chaff—the crushed dusty remnant separated from the good wheat on the threshing floor—is winnowed right into the fire.
Now, God desires that all men be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth—his truth. It's not his will that some be saved while others are crushed and sent to hell. However…it is precisely God's Will that everyone fall upon him and be broken into a million pieces. There is a difference between being crushed and being broken—a huge difference. God's will is that neither you nor anyone else nor anything else can put you back together again after the Rock of his Word breaks you; that is, anyone but him alone.

You see, that's exactly what God's Word of Law and Gospel does, and it does it in that exact order—all the time. This is his good and gracious will. The Law comes into our lives, and like Humpty Dumpty, we are pushed by that Word of Law off of our proud, arrogant, sinful perches, and broken. God's Law meets us and cracks us right open, exposing our sin for what it is. Our natural tendency is to justify ourselves, passing our sins off as somehow less than sin, or less evil than some other guy's sin, but God's Word cuts through all that foolishness. His Word of the Law confronts and kills. It necessarily breaks us into irreparable shards and pieces.

That brings up a good point. Do you notice the future aspect in Jesus' words? Not everyone is immediately broken into pieces when they encounter Christ and his Word and his will. Some people flat out reject him. Some people refuse ever to let God's Word break them down. They refuse ever to let God's Word conform them to his will. They hear what Christ is saying, but unlike Humpty Dumpty, they encounter God's Word and they hold on tight to their foolish, sinful little perch. They refuse to be broken. However, just because God's Word hasn't broken them yet doesn't mean that it won't at sometime in the future. There's a definite end-time, Judgment Day aspect to this passage: everyone, at some point, will encounter the truth of Christ, the Rock of our salvation. And when that encounter comes, it will either break them, or crush them.
But here's the thing: God doesn't leave us on this side of eternity irreparably broken and dead and miserable. Through his life-giving Gospel—both in Word and Sacrament—God resurrects us. He puts us back together anew—not just "again," but anew, exactly the way he wants. He gives us new and renewed life in Christ. And make no mistakes: In this new and sanctified life, we're not supposed to simply climb right back up on our sinful wall, acting like the sinful, self-righteous Humpty Dumptys who justly deserve temporal and eternal punishment. That's why I said that God doesn't just put us back together again. He doesn't want the old self restored; he wants the new resurrected self. "Go and sin no more," Jesus says. The new life that we live in the joy of our justification, the new sanctified life in Christ, is a life that now desires to do God's will. We desire to do that will not to be saved, but because we are saved—saved by Christ alone.

There's a Lenten theme of repentance peeking through here. In reality, before God's eyes, everyone—every single man, woman, and child born of Adam—is already broken into a million pieces. We may not see it that way through our fallen and sinful eyes, but that's exactly how God sees it. We've all been dashed upon the Rock of Righteousness. There is nothing outside of Christ that can repair the shattered pieces of our fallen sinful life.

However, in true, faithful repentance, we, as baptized children of promise, call out to God from our brokenness, asking him to be merciful to us because of Christ Jesus. The joy, the beauty in all this is that God does exactly that, and more. Not only does he show us mercy and forgiveness in our broken sinfulness, but he also truly does put us back together anew in Christ, making us alive and declaring us to be his precious treasure. You are a treasure so precious that he was willing to ransom his own Son's life in exchange.

So may our Lord, through the working of His Holy Spirit in His Word and Sacraments, continue to open your eyes and ears of faith, so that you may always be able to recognize the deadly reality of your broken, sinful condition. May he grant you the sure and certain faith that doesn't foolishly despair, but instead calls out to him in faithful confidence to be merciful to you because of Christ Jesus alone. More importantly, may he continue to bless you with the opened ears and eyes of saving faith, so that you, with all the faithful, may ever be able to recognize the blessed transcendent Gospel reality that is yours, mine, and belongs to all who've been broken and put back together anew in Christ Jesus, their Lord and Savior. In Jesus' name, amen.
Wisdom is an interesting thing in that true wisdom is not restricted to particular cultures or languages. True wisdom is transcendent; it's cross-cultural in every sense of the word. Sure, it may need to be translated into a different language or contextualized in order for it to make sense to someone else, but the core meaning is still there. The meaning remains the same no matter what language or culture or era it is spoken in.

As an example, the Golden Rule isn't just restricted to contemporary English-speaking Westerners. You could go anywhere in the world and find that the golden rule—do unto others as you would want them to do unto you—is known by people of every race, creed, social standing, and culture. They may say it differently from us, but in the end they're saying the same thing, and they've been saying it for a very long time. Another good example of transcendent wisdom: If mama ain't happy, ain't nobody happy! This may be said a million different ways from one culture to the next, but there has never been a husband at any time in history who doesn't understand this wisdom!

Today's Gospel lesson, at first glance, appears to contain a pearl of such wisdom. Many cultures have taken Christ's words in verse 18 about falling on a stone or being crushed by the stone and adapted them to their own folk wisdom and proverbs. Jesus says, "Everyone who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces, and when it falls on anyone, it will crush him." The Jews give credit to a second-century rabbi living in Jerusalem for this similar-sounding proverb: "If a stone falls on a pot, woe to the pot. If a pot falls onto the stone, woe to the pot. Either way, woe to the pot." This same saying is recounted in African and Islamic culture as well, only the Muslims substitute an egg for the pot. "...Either way, woe to the egg."
If you look carefully at the context of Christ's words here in verse 18, though, there's more to it than that. Is Jesus offering up some folksy, fortune-cookie bit of wisdom like the other guys do? "Hey, whether you fall on a stone or the stone falls on you, the results are going to be bad. So whatever the stones are in your life, don't mess with them. You will lose. The stone will win." That's the kind of stuff a lot of people hope to hear in church—some folksy, useful advice for "real life"—but unfortunately for them, that's not what Jesus is saying here. Look again at verse 18: Jesus uses distinct language when he says, "Everyone who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces, and when it falls on anyone, it will crush him."

This isn't just some universal bit of advice, because Jesus himself is the stone he is talking about. This is the stone that the builders rejected, Jesus says in verse 17, which has become the cornerstone. And Jesus doesn't give any non-violent options for encountering the stone: you either fall upon it and break into pieces, or it falls upon you, and you are crushed. This includes even believers—we too are either broken or crushed by Jesus. So what does that mean? It means that everyone, in one way or another, will encounter Christ, the Rock of our salvation, and the result will be brokenness.

The next question that naturally arises is: what does it mean to be broken? What does it mean to be crushed? The Greek word here translated "crushed," λικμάω (lick-MAH-oh), is also a farming term that refers to winnowing. Winnowing is the process by which wheat is separated from chaff by blowing it with a fan, causing the lighter chaff to be blown away and leaving the good grain behind. You may recall John the Baptist's words about Jesus in Matthew 3: "His winnowing fork is in his hand, and he will clear his threshing floor and gather his wheat into the barn, but the chaff he will burn with unquenchable fire." While "crushed" in today's reading carries a different meaning, the implication of separating wheat from chaff remains. The sinful chaff—the crushed dusty remnant separated from the good wheat on the threshing floor—is winnowed right into the fire.
Now, God desires that all men be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth—his truth. It's not his will that some be saved while others are crushed and sent to hell. However…it is precisely God's Will that everyone fall upon him and be broken into a million pieces. There is a difference between being crushed and being broken—a huge difference. God's will is that neither you nor anyone else nor anything else can put you back together again after the Rock of his Word breaks you; that is, anyone but him alone.

You see, that's exactly what God's Word of Law and Gospel does, and it does it in that exact order—all the time. This is his good and gracious will. The Law comes into our lives, and like Humpty Dumpty, we are pushed by that Word of Law off of our proud, arrogant, sinful perches, and broken. God's Law meets us and cracks us right open, exposing our sin for what it is. Our natural tendency is to justify ourselves, passing our sins off as somehow less than sin, or less evil than some other guy's sin, but God's Word cuts through all that foolishness. His Word of the Law confronts and kills. It necessarily breaks us into irreparable shards and pieces.

That brings up a good point. Do you notice the future aspect in Jesus' words? Not everyone is immediately broken into pieces when they encounter Christ and his Word and his will. Some people flat out reject him. Some people refuse ever to let God's Word break them down. They refuse ever to let God's Word conform them to his will. They hear what Christ is saying, but unlike Humpty Dumpty, they encounter God's Word and they hold on tight to their foolish, sinful little perch. They refuse to be broken. However, just because God's Word hasn't broken them yet doesn't mean that it won't at sometime in the future. There's a definite end-time, Judgment Day aspect to this passage: everyone, at some point, will encounter the truth of Christ, the Rock of our salvation. And when that encounter comes, it will either break them, or crush them.
But here's the thing: God doesn't leave us on this side of eternity irreparably broken and dead and miserable. Through his life-giving Gospel—both in Word and Sacrament—God resurrects us. He puts us back together anew—not just "again," but anew, exactly the way he wants. He gives us new and renewed life in Christ. And make no mistakes: In this new and sanctified life, we're not supposed to simply climb right back up on our sinful wall, acting like the sinful, self-righteous Humpty Dumptys who justly deserve temporal and eternal punishment. That's why I said that God doesn't just put us back together again. He doesn't want the old self restored; he wants the new resurrected self. "Go and sin no more," Jesus says. The new life that we live in the joy of our justification, the new sanctified life in Christ, is a life that now desires to do God's will. We desire to do that will not to be saved, but because we are saved—saved by Christ alone.

There's a Lenten theme of repentance peeking through here. In reality, before God's eyes, everyone—every single man, woman, and child born of Adam—is already broken into a million pieces. We may not see it that way through our fallen and sinful eyes, but that's exactly how God sees it. We've all been dashed upon the Rock of Righteousness. There is nothing outside of Christ that can repair the shattered pieces of our fallen sinful life.

However, in true, faithful repentance, we, as baptized children of promise, call out to God from our brokenness, asking him to be merciful to us because of Christ Jesus. The joy, the beauty in all this is that God does exactly that, and more. Not only does he show us mercy and forgiveness in our broken sinfulness, but he also truly does put us back together anew in Christ, making us alive and declaring us to be his precious treasure. You are a treasure so precious that he was willing to ransom his own Son's life in exchange.

So may our Lord, through the working of His Holy Spirit in His Word and Sacraments, continue to open your eyes and ears of faith, so that you may always be able to recognize the deadly reality of your broken, sinful condition. May he grant you the sure and certain faith that doesn't foolishly despair, but instead calls out to him in faithful confidence to be merciful to you because of Christ Jesus alone. More importantly, may he continue to bless you with the opened ears and eyes of saving faith, so that you, with all the faithful, may ever be able to recognize the blessed transcendent Gospel reality that is yours, mine, and belongs to all who've been broken and put back together anew in Christ Jesus, their Lord and Savior. In Jesus' name, amen.
Wisdom is an interesting thing in that true wisdom is not restricted to particular cultures or languages. True wisdom is transcendent; it's cross-cultural in every sense of the word. Sure, it may need to be translated into a different language or contextualized in order for it to make sense to someone else, but the core meaning is still there. The meaning remains the same no matter what language or culture or era it is spoken in.

As an example, the Golden Rule isn't just restricted to contemporary English-speaking Westerners. You could go anywhere in the world and find that the golden rule—do unto others as you would want them to do unto you—is known by people of every race, creed, social standing, and culture. They may say it differently from us, but in the end they're saying the same thing, and they've been saying it for a very long time. Another good example of transcendent wisdom: If mama ain't happy, ain't nobody happy! This may be said a million different ways from one culture to the next, but there has never been a husband at any time in history who doesn't understand this wisdom!

Today's Gospel lesson, at first glance, appears to contain a pearl of such wisdom. Many cultures have taken Christ's words in verse 18 about falling on a stone or being crushed by the stone and adapted them to their own folk wisdom and proverbs. Jesus says, "Everyone who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces, and when it falls on anyone, it will crush him." The Jews give credit to a second-century rabbi living in Jerusalem for this similar-sounding proverb: "If a stone falls on a pot, woe to the pot. If a pot falls onto the stone, woe to the pot. Either way, woe to the pot." This same saying is recounted in African and Islamic culture as well, only the Muslims substitute an egg for the pot. "…Either way, woe to the egg."
If you look carefully at the context of Christ's words here in verse 18, though, there's more to it than that. Is Jesus offering up some folksy, fortune-cookie bit of wisdom like the other guys do? "Hey, whether you fall on a stone or the stone falls on you, the results are going to be bad. So whatever the stones are in your life, don't mess with them. You will lose. The stone will win." That's the kind of stuff a lot of people hope to hear in church—some folksy, useful advice for "real life"—but unfortunately for them, that's not what Jesus is saying here. Look again at verse 18: Jesus uses distinct language when he says, "Everyone who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces, and when it falls on anyone, it will crush him."

This isn't just some universal bit of advice, because Jesus himself is the stone he is talking about. This is the stone that the builders rejected, Jesus says in verse 17, which has become the cornerstone. And Jesus doesn't give any non-violent options for encountering the stone: you either fall upon it and break into pieces, or it falls upon you, and you are crushed. This includes even believers—we too are either broken or crushed by Jesus. So what does that mean? It means that everyone, in one way or another, will encounter Christ, the Rock of our salvation, and the result will be brokenness.

The next question that naturally arises is: what does it mean to be broken? What does it mean to be crushed? The Greek word here translated "crushed," λικμάω (lick-MAH-oh), is also a farming term that refers to winnowing. Winnowing is the process by which wheat is separated from chaff by blowing it with a fan, causing the lighter chaff to be blown away and leaving the good grain behind. You may recall John the Baptist's words about Jesus in Matthew 3: "His winnowing fork is in his hand, and he will clear his threshing floor and gather his wheat into the barn, but the chaff he will burn with unquenchable fire." While "crushed" in today's reading carries a different meaning, the implication of separating wheat from chaff remains. The sinful chaff—the crushed dusty remnant separated from the good wheat on the threshing floor—is winnowed right into the fire.
Now, God desires that all men be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth—his truth. It's not his will that some be saved while others are crushed and sent to hell. However…it is precisely God's Will that everyone fall upon him and be broken into a million pieces. There is a difference between being crushed and being broken—a huge difference. God's will is that neither you nor anyone else nor anything else can put you back together again after the Rock of his Word breaks you; that is, anyone but him alone.

You see, that's exactly what God's Word of Law and Gospel does, and it does it in that exact order—all the time. This is his good and gracious will. The Law comes into our lives, and like Humpty Dumpty, we are pushed by that Word of Law off of our proud, arrogant, sinful perches, and broken. God's Law meets us and cracks us right open, exposing our sin for what it is. Our natural tendency is to justify ourselves, passing our sins off as somehow less than sin, or less evil than some other guy's sin, but God's Word cuts through all that foolishness. His Word of the Law confronts and kills. It necessarily breaks us into irreparable shards and pieces.

That brings up a good point. Do you notice the future aspect in Jesus' words? Not everyone is immediately broken into pieces when they encounter Christ and his Word and his will. Some people flat out reject him. Some people refuse ever to let God's Word break them down. They refuse ever to let God's Word conform them to his will. They hear what Christ is saying, but unlike Humpty Dumpty, they encounter God's Word and they hold on tight to their foolish, sinful little perch. They refuse to be broken. However, just because God's Word hasn't broken them yet doesn't mean that it won't at sometime in the future. There's a definite end-time, Judgment Day aspect to this passage: everyone, at some point, will encounter the truth of Christ, the Rock of our salvation. And when that encounter comes, it will either break them, or crush them.
But here's the thing: God doesn't leave us on this side of eternity irreparably broken and dead and miserable. Through his life-giving Gospel—both in Word and Sacrament—God resurrects us. He puts us back together anew—not just "again," but anew, exactly the way he wants. He gives us new and renewed life in Christ. And make no mistakes: In this new and sanctified life, we're not supposed to simply climb right back up on our sinful wall, acting like the sinful, self-righteous Humpty Dumptys who justly deserve temporal and eternal punishment. That's why I said that God doesn't just put us back together again. He doesn't want the old self restored; he wants the new resurrected self. "Go and sin no more," Jesus says. The new life that we live in the joy of our justification, the new sanctified life in Christ, is a life that now desires to do God's will. We desire to do that will not to be saved, but because we are saved—saved by Christ alone.

There's a Lenten theme of repentance peeking through here. In reality, before God's eyes, everyone—every single man, woman, and child born of Adam—is already broken into a million pieces. We may not see it that way through our fallen and sinful eyes, but that's exactly how God sees it. We've all been dashed upon the Rock of Righteousness. There is nothing outside of Christ that can repair the shattered pieces of our fallen sinful life.

However, in true, faithful repentance, we, as baptized children of promise, call out to God from our brokenness, asking him to be merciful to us because of Christ Jesus. The joy, the beauty in all this is that God does exactly that, and more. Not only does he show us mercy and forgiveness in our broken sinfulness, but he also truly does put us back together anew in Christ, making us alive and declaring us to be his precious treasure. You are a treasure so precious that he was willing to ransom his own Son's life in exchange.

So may our Lord, through the working of His Holy Spirit in His Word and Sacraments, continue to open your eyes and ears of faith, so that you may always be able to recognize the deadly reality of your broken, sinful condition. May he grant you the sure and certain faith that doesn't foolishly despair, but instead calls out to him in faithful confidence to be merciful to you because of Christ Jesus alone. More importantly, may he continue to bless you with the opened ears and eyes of saving faith, so that you, with all the faithful, may ever be able to recognize the blessed transcendent Gospel reality that is yours, mine, and belongs to all who've been broken and put back together anew in Christ Jesus, their Lord and Savior. In Jesus' name, amen.
Wisdom is an interesting thing in that true wisdom is not restricted to particular cultures or languages. True wisdom is transcendent; it's cross-cultural in every sense of the word. Sure, it may need to be translated into a different language or contextualized in order for it to make sense to someone else, but the core meaning is still there. The meaning remains the same no matter what language or culture or era it is spoken in.

As an example, the Golden Rule isn't just restricted to contemporary English-speaking Westerners. You could go anywhere in the world and find that the golden rule—do unto others as you would want them to do unto you—is known by people of every race, creed, social standing, and culture. They may say it differently from us, but in the end they're saying the same thing, and they've been saying it for a very long time. Another good example of transcendent wisdom: If mama ain't happy, ain't nobody happy! This may be said a million different ways from one culture to the next, but there has never been a husband at any time in history who doesn't understand this wisdom!

Today's Gospel lesson, at first glance, appears to contain a pearl of such wisdom. Many cultures have taken Christ's words in verse 18 about falling on a stone or being crushed by the stone and adapted them to their own folk wisdom and proverbs. Jesus says, "Everyone who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces, and when it falls on anyone, it will crush him." The Jews give credit to a second-century rabbi living in Jerusalem for this similar-sounding proverb: "If a stone falls on a pot, woe to the pot. If a pot falls onto the stone, woe to the pot. Either way, woe to the pot." This same saying is recounted in African and Islamic culture as well, only the Muslims substitute an egg for the pot. "…Either way, woe to the egg."
If you look carefully at the context of Christ's words here in verse 18, though, there's more to it than that. Is Jesus offering up some folksy, fortune-cookie bit of wisdom like the other guys do? "Hey, whether you fall on a stone or the stone falls on you, the results are going to be bad. So whatever the stones are in your life, don't mess with them. You will lose. The stone will win." That's the kind of stuff a lot of people hope to hear in church—some folksy, useful advice for "real life"—but unfortunately for them, that's not what Jesus is saying here. Look again at verse 18: Jesus uses distinct language when he says, "Everyone who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces, and when it falls on anyone, it will crush him."

This isn't just some universal bit of advice, because Jesus himself is the stone he is talking about. This is the stone that the builders rejected, Jesus says in verse 17, which has become the cornerstone. And Jesus doesn't give any non-violent options for encountering the stone: you either fall upon it and break into pieces, or it falls upon you, and you are crushed. This includes even believers—we too are either broken or crushed by Jesus. So what does that mean? It means that everyone, in one way or another, will encounter Christ, the Rock of our salvation, and the result will be brokenness.

The next question that naturally arises is: what does it mean to be broken? What does it mean to be crushed? The Greek word here translated "crushed," λικμάω (lick-MAH-oh), is also a farming term that refers to winnowing. Winnowing is the process by which wheat is separated from chaff by blowing it with a fan, causing the lighter chaff to be blown away and leaving the good grain behind. You may recall John the Baptist's words about Jesus in Matthew 3: "His winnowing fork is in his hand, and he will clear his threshing floor and gather his wheat into the barn, but the chaff he will burn with unquenchable fire." While "crushed" in today's reading carries a different meaning, the implication of separating wheat from chaff remains. The sinful chaff—the crushed dusty remnant separated from the good wheat on the threshing floor—is winnowed right into the fire.
Now, God desires that all men be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth—his truth. It's not his will that some be saved while others are crushed and sent to hell. However…it is precisely God's Will that everyone fall upon him and be broken into a million pieces. There is a difference between being crushed and being broken—a huge difference. God's will is that neither you nor anyone else nor anything else can put you back together again after the Rock of his Word breaks you; that is, anyone but him alone.

You see, that's exactly what God's Word of Law and Gospel does, and it does it in that exact order—all the time. This is his good and gracious will. The Law comes into our lives, and like Humpty Dumpty, we are pushed by that Word of Law off of our proud, arrogant, sinful perches, and broken. God's Law meets us and cracks us right open, exposing our sin for what it is. Our natural tendency is to justify ourselves, passing our sins off as somehow less than sin, or less evil than some other guy's sin, but God's Word cuts through all that foolishness. His Word of the Law confronts and kills. It necessarily breaks us into irreparable shards and pieces.

That brings up a good point. Do you notice the future aspect in Jesus' words? Not everyone is immediately broken into pieces when they encounter Christ and his Word and his will. Some people flat out reject him. Some people refuse ever to let God's Word break them down. They refuse ever to let God's Word conform them to his will. They hear what Christ is saying, but unlike Humpty Dumpty, they encounter God's Word and they hold on tight to their foolish, sinful little perch. They refuse to be broken. However, just because God's Word hasn't broken them yet doesn't mean that it won't at sometime in the future. There's a definite end-time, Judgment Day aspect to this passage: everyone, at some point, will encounter the truth of Christ, the Rock of our salvation. And when that encounter comes, it will either break them, or crush them.
But here's the thing: God doesn't leave us on this side of eternity irreparably broken and dead and miserable. Through his life-giving Gospel—both in Word and Sacrament—God resurrects us. He puts us back together anew—not just "again," but anew, exactly the way he wants. He gives us new and renewed life in Christ. And make no mistakes: In this new and sanctified life, we're not supposed to simply climb right back up on our sinful wall, acting like the sinful, self-righteous Humpty Dumptys who justly deserve temporal and eternal punishment. That's why I said that God doesn't just put us back together again. He doesn't want the old self restored; he wants the new resurrected self. "Go and sin no more," Jesus says. The new life that we live in the joy of our justification, the new sanctified life in Christ, is a life that now desires to do God's will. We desire to do that will not to be saved, but because we are saved—saved by Christ alone.

There's a Lenten theme of repentance peeking through here. In reality, before God's eyes, everyone—every single man, woman, and child born of Adam—is already broken into a million pieces. We may not see it that way through our fallen and sinful eyes, but that's exactly how God sees it. We've all been dashed upon the Rock of Righteousness. There is nothing outside of Christ that can repair the shattered pieces of our fallen sinful life.

However, in true, faithful repentance, we, as baptized children of promise, call out to God from our brokenness, asking him to be merciful to us because of Christ Jesus. The joy, the beauty in all this is that God does exactly that, and more. Not only does he show us mercy and forgiveness in our broken sinfulness, but he also truly does put us back together anew in Christ, making us alive and declaring us to be his precious treasure. You are a treasure so precious that he was willing to ransom his own Son's life in exchange.

So may our Lord, through the working of His Holy Spirit in His Word and Sacraments, continue to open your eyes and ears of faith, so that you may always be able to recognize the deadly reality of your broken, sinful condition. May he grant you the sure and certain faith that doesn't foolishly despair, but instead calls out to him in faithful confidence to be merciful to you because of Christ Jesus alone. More importantly, may he continue to bless you with the opened ears and eyes of saving faith, so that you, with all the faithful, may ever be able to recognize the blessed transcendent Gospel reality that is yours, mine, and belongs to all who've been broken and put back together anew in Christ Jesus, their Lord and Savior. In Jesus' name, amen.